Explanation: The 'security dilemma' describes the irresolvable uncertainty whether the other's military preparation is for defensive or offensive purposes. States don't trust each other, hence military preparations will be matched by a balance of power of neighbouring states-naturally, from a neo-realist point of view, or under the impact of state leaders as in classical realism.

6. Ans. b

Explanation: Realists are not by principle advocates of an aggressive foreign policy. However, having always in mind the primary national interest of survival, they support war when it is necessary to achieve this interest.
